Summary

New technologies are an important attraction and are increasingly present in our daily lives. Many applications are developed, both for play and learn. Programmed, predictable and emotionally neutral environment of new technologies is particularly attractive for people with ASD. All applications are however not suitable, so it is important to make selection.
« Applications-Autisme » is a website, designed with parents and professionals, that references applications for phones or tablets suitable for people with autism. They are categorized depending on subject area. Thus, it's possible to find applications for communication, logical reasoning, reading and writing, science and mathematics, independence, social skills and spatiotemporal skills. Recreational activities are also available.
